

Research Summer School on Social, commercial, and political determinants of health: Emerging issues

Universidad de Alcalá, June 17-21, 2024

Invitation as a Guest Speaker

We cordially invite you to participate as a guest speaker in our upcoming one-week course on Social Epidemiology, scheduled at the University of Alcalá, Madrid, from June 17 to 21, 2024. As esteemed members of one of the university partners in the EUGLOH consortium, we value your institution's contributions in the field of social epidemiology and call for the expertise of your faculty members in the course. Their participation will make a significant contribution to the academic enrichment of this program.

The course aims to delve into the intricate and intertwined connections of the social, political, and commercial determinants with health outcomes in Europe and around the world. We are specifically interested in examining issues considered as determinants of health inequities/inequalities in your context, such as immigration and urban health, which are key social determinants of health in Spain. Covering fundamental concepts, methodologies, and practical applications in social epidemiology, we aim to provide participants with a holistic understanding of the subject.

We would be honoured to have the contribution of one of your faculty members with a 75-minute session, comprising a presentation and interactive Q&A, offering participants insights that bridge theoretical foundations with real-world applications.

Given the collaborative nature of our consortium, the participation of faculty members from your institution presents an excellent opportunity to foster academic collaboration across institutions. We are committed to facilitating their involvement, whether in person or virtually, and kindly request your confirmation of availability by January 8th, 2024. Their contribution to this course not only enhances its academic value but also strengthens the collaborative spirit of our consortium. We look forward to the possibility of having one of your faculty members as a guest speaker.
